

Hospice Service

We accompany people in dying and mourning

We regard dying as a part of life like being born. Life should be neither artificially prolonged nor shortened. Wherever we spend the last time of our earthly life: Everyone should find the necessary attention, safety and security - until the end.

"You are important because they are you. They are important until the last moment of your life! And we will do everything we can to not only die in peace, but to live to the last. "

Cicely Saunders (1918 - 2005), founder of the first hospice in London.

We accompany the seriously ill and dying people regardless of age, illness, religion or nationality.

- We visit them in their familiar environment at home, in the nursing home or in the hospital.
- We support and relieve, give proximity, affection and encouragement.
- We take our time, listen and we are open for talking.
- We work voluntarily, free of charge and are subject to confidentiality.
- Upon request, we are a partner to social services, doctors, pastoral workers and other integrated services.
- We support relatives at the time of mourning through funeral talks and grief groups.
- We provide qualified advice on health care proxy and patient's provision.

The Odenwald Hospice Service of the Protestant Deanery Bergstrasse, which is based in Wald-Michelbach, accompanies severely sick and dying people regardless of age, illness, religion and nationality.
